20 WHEREAS, Mr. Murphey said that the purpose of the school was to meet as much as possible the needs of every 21 child in its care in order that they be prepared to meet and deal with whatever problems their future lives would entail, and 22 that they would become the kinds of citizens "of whom all will be proud"; and

23 WHEREAS, today the Murphey School is a nonprofit organization which provides residential group care and 24 transitional care for homeless children ages six to 18, and sometimes to age 22; and

26 offered a mentor to address job skills, money management, interpersonal skills, transportation, and educational planning; 27 and

28 WHEREAS, the school's independent/transitional living program also works with high school graduates to

30 housing as they work toward independence; and

31 WHEREAS, the keynote of the Murphey School is the individual child who has a distinct personality, and its

34 monitors and licenses the facility; and

45 lives would entail, and that they would become the kinds of citizens 'of whom all will be proud'"; and

46 WHEREAS, among the many alumnae of the Murphey School who have gone on to lead worthwhile and 47 successful lives is one man who served for many years as the mayor of Dover; and

48 WHEREAS, this remarkable facility has throughout its long history of service to the youth of the First State been 49 nearly unique in the services it provides to its young residents, who come together to form their own family, as shown by a
50 story told in a recent speech to the Capital City Rotary Club by Murphey School staffer Eddie Cregar of how students help 51 each other, giving the example of a 17-year-old teaching a six-year-old how to tie his shoelaces; and

52 WHEREAS, the Murphey School has for a century embodied the vision of Mr. Sanford Sayre Murphey in 53 establishing it in the autumn of 1922.
