2 Surveillance System, in 1986, to collect data about the prevalence and causes of pregnancy-related deaths in the United 3 States; and

4 WHEREAS, pregnancy-related deaths are defined as the number of birthing persons who die during pregnancy or 5 within one year after a childbirth; and

8 and

9 WHEREAS, it is estimated that up to 80 % of all pregnancy-related deaths are preventable; and

10 WHEREAS, data from the Delaware Maternal Mortality Review Committee (MMRC) 2022 indicates that racial 11 disparities continue to exist with poor maternal outcomes, as Black births comprise 28% of all births, but Black birthing 12 persons account for 75% of all pregnancy-related deaths; and

13 WHEREAS, the MMRC data also demonstrates that a growing number of maternal deaths are linked to

16 currently only at 65 % adequacy across all health care workforce; and

17 WHEREAS, HRSA is also predicting by 2036, Delaware will only be at 55% adequacy across all health care 18 workforce, indicating an increasing loss of workforce for provision of care and access; and

19 WHEREAS, according to a 2022 March of Dimes report, more than one third of all US counties are considered 20 “maternity care deserts” which has resulted in patients travelling longer distances to receive or just go without, much 21 needed care; and

22 WHEREAS, Governor Carney provided the first proclamation of Maternal Health Awareness Day in Delaware on 23 January 23, 2018 to bring together community, healthcare and legislator stakeholders for a day of recognition and solution-24 building regarding the ongoing crisis in maternal health outcomes; and

25 WHEREAS, since then, the General Assembly has recognized annually, January 23rd as Maternal Health
26 Awareness Day, in Delaware to highlight such pressing maternal health issues, as gaps in postpartum care, postpartum 27 depression, postpartum hemorrhage and substance use disorder; and 28 WHEREAS, this collaborative effort across all stakeholders in maternal care has promoted the work of the 29 Delaware Quality Perinatal Collaborative and such important initiatives, as the Alliance for Innovation on Maternal Health 30 and the expansion of postpartum insurance coverage to maintain critical maternal access and to address the impact of the 31 current severe maternal morbidity and mortality crisis in Delaware.
