(c) No redistricting plan adopted pursuant to this subchapter shall alter the composition of the General Assembly or provide for a number of legislative districts different than that established by the General Assembly.

§ 808. Redistricting after federal decennial census; the authorization and creation of a protocol for full bipartisan participation.

(a) Findings and Purpose. The General Assembly finds that the establishment of a redistricting protocol to redraw the state legislative districts following each decennial federal census will advance the principle of fair and equal representation upon which our system of government is based, eliminating the practice of partisan gerrymandering.

(b) The apportionment provided for by this chapter shall continue in effect until the official reporting by the President of the United States of the next federal decennial census. After the official reporting of the federal decennial census by the President to Congress, and each decade thereafter, the protocol established pursuant to this subchapter shall be authorized to redistrict the legislative districts of the state Senate and the House of Representatives.

§ 810. Assistance and Funding.

(a) Operation of the caucus redistricting committees shall be funded by the General Assembly. The State of Delaware shall provide each caucus redistricting committee with such support staff, consultants, equipment, computer software, materials, and other resources that are needed to complete the redistricting process. If needed and requested by the leadership of any caucus, the State of Delaware shall provide each caucus redistricting committee with sufficient, secure office space to conduct their work.

(b) The General Assembly shall take all necessary steps to ensure that a complete and accurate computerized database is available for redistricting, and that procedures are in place to provide the public ready access to redistricting data and computer software for drawing district maps. These resources are to be made available from the time the committees form until the new legislative maps are enacted into law.

(c) The Commissioner of Elections and all 4 caucus redistricting committees shall work together to ensure that coordination with local and county redistricting efforts is maintained throughout the process. The Commissioner of Elections and the county offices shall make their personnel (including those familiar with the redistricting process) and resources (including computer software) readily available to assist the caucus redistricting committees and their staffs.

SYNOPSIS

The constitutional requirement to create new legislative districts following the U.S. Census was intended to ensure equal representation at all levels of government. However, Delaware's current process of redistricting is deeply flawed. It allows the majority party in each legislative chamber to gerrymander state legislative maps in a self-serving attempt to preserve and expand partisan political power. All other considerations have become secondary in this process. This defect is common to many states and some have tried to address the issue by creating election commissions charged with redrawing legislative lines. The challenge in such a system is ensuring that these commissions can conduct their function in a balanced, objective, and non-partisan fashion. This bill proposes a new method that avoids this significant hurdle by leveraging partisan self-interest to create a protocol that results in an equitable outcome. This fresh approach to reapportionment is described in a paper by 3 Carnegie Mellon University professors entitled: "A Partisan Districting Protocol with Provably Nonpartisan Outcomes." It utilizes a system analogous to a proven, prudent method for instructing 2 children to fairly divide a piece of cake between themselves. The first child cuts the cake, while the second has the option of selecting which piece he or she wishes to consume. In the protocol outlined in this bill, the two competing parties are the partisan caucuses of each General Assembly chamber. The first caucus will initially draw all the legislative districts, observing established legal redistricting standards. The second caucus will have the ability to "freeze" a set number of the districts, locking their boundaries into place. They will then be able to redraw the remaining districts as they wish, delivering the new maps back to the first caucus. This group will then also engage in the freeze and redraw process, with the cycles continuing until all the districts have been defined. With both sides getting equal "bites of the apple," each has a practical ability to affect the outcome and a reason to work together to achieve a mutually acceptable conclusion. The bill also includes safeguards to ensure public notification and participation in the process, as well as a contingency to allow the judicial branch to draw the new legislative maps should the General Assembly be unable to achieve the task. This legislation assumes calling the General Assembly into special session to approve the finalized maps, providing enough time for the process to be conducted in a deliberative manner.
